I. SHORT BIOGRAPHY OF PROFESSOR WILKIE AND ROLE AT UCLA AND FOUNDING PRESIDENT OF HRF AND PROFMEX

At UCLA in the Department of History since 1968, Dr. James W. Wilkie is a tenured Professor of Social, Economic, Political, and Elitelore Studies of Latin America and its role in the world. He received the 1968 Bolton Prize for his methodological breakthroughs in research and analysis of statistical series on Mexican expenditures and social change from 1900 to 1967.

Previously, Wilkie graduated from Mexico City College (B.A., 1958) and UC Berkeley (Ph.D., 1965) before joining the faculty of The Ohio State University (OSU, 1965–1968). With financial support from Berkeley and OSU, he formally established his research and publication on the Oral History of Mexican Leaders, and funding from OSU and UCLA made it possible for him to expand his statistical and oral history research into Central and South America.

Since 1968 Professor Wilkie has served as the President of HRF (Society for Historical Research and Future Alternatives) (a non-profit foundation chartered by the U.S. Department of the Treasury). HRF has facilitated his research throughout the 20 countries of Latin America (e.g.: Mexico, Bolivia, Brazil, Costa Rica, Venezuela), Europe (e.g.: EU relation to Romania, Hungary, France, Spain, Switzerland), and APEC (e.g.: China, Japan, Singapore)

Between 1976 and 2002 Dr. Wilkie pioneered the development of the Statistical Abstract of Latin America (SALA) and its Analytical Series, under the auspices of the UCLA Latin American Center, research which frequently took him to all 20 countries of the region.

At UC-MEXUS from 1981 to 1983, Professor Wilkie was the Founding Director for the systemwide University of California Consortium on Mexico and the United States. At UC-MEXUS, he established the basis for exchange of scholars via CONACyT (The Mexican National Science Foundation) to develop joint U.S-Mexican research projects on-going still today 30 years later since its inception.

From 1982 to 2009, Dr. Wilkie served as Chair (Director) of the UCLA Program on Mexico (POM), which conducted research and organized conferences throughout the many regions of Mexico as well as in the area of Greater Los Angeles (from Santa Barbara to Ensenada and from Riverside/Mexicali to the Pacific Ocean). Furthermore, with funds provided by the Hewlett Foundation, in 1996 POM co-organized with CONACyT conferences with the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences in Beijing, building upon Professor Wilkie's research travels to link scholars in the Americas to Chinese and Japanese scholars conducting research on Mexico. These antecedents helped to further cement Mexico's and China's participation and role in APEC (Asian-Pacific Economic Cooperation) Forum.

In 1982 James Wilkie founded the Worldwide Consortium for Research on Mexico (PROFMEX), a non-profit research organization chartered by the U.S. Department of Treasury. PROFMEX was hosted at UCLA through the academic year 2001-2002. Under Professor Wilkie's leadership, PROFMEX has founded the two longest standing publication series on U.S.-Mexican history. The first is a Book Series; the second is a web journal. Both series are published by the University of Guadalajara (UdeG), PROFMEX, and UCLA Program on Mexico.

II. MAJOR CURRENT RESEARCH PROJECT

U.S.–MEXICAN SOCIAL SECURITY AND TAX POLICY STUDIES

Since the early 1990s, Dr. Wilkie provided pro bono the consultations with the United States and Mexico.

The First Stage ending in 1994 resulted in the revision of the Mexico–U.S. Tax Treaty to provide for the tax-free flow of non-profit funds between the two countries. Appointed by the U.S. Council on Foundations to develop the flow of such funds as part of NAFTA, he reported that the NAFTA Treaty is limited to profit-making corporations and independent private businesses, hence that treaty could not include Non-Profit Organizations.

Fortunately, however, Professor Wilkie found that the Mexico–U.S. Tax Treaty was about to be concluded and he persuaded tax officials in both countries to delay the final revisions until provisions were developed to provide for the free flow of NPPO funds. Thus, the Revised U.S.–Mexico Tax Treaty entered into effect in parallel with NAFTA.

Non-profit funds from the USA have provided foundation grants to enhance, for example, the role of Mexican universities, biosphere projects, hospitals, environmental projects, and increase of fellowships for Mexican professors and students. Foundations and universities in the USA have been transferring funds to Mexico tax free since 1994 and Mexican universities have been able in the same manner to send research funds to U.S. institutions.

Professor Wilkie has introduced since the early 1990s many U.S. foundation presidents to the many regions of Mexico, thus encouraging decentralized development.

The Second Stage of the Project on U.S.–Mexican Social Security and Tax Policy involves preventing double taxation and over-withholding taxes from employee and independent-consultant salaries.

Further, Dr. Wilkie seeks to establish the combining (“Totalization”) of U.S.–Mexican Social Security Benefits as well as U.S.–Mexican Personal Tax Harmonization via bilateral Agreement and Treaty, respectively. The amount of credit “frozen” in Washington, D.C. and mainly owed to Mexicans totals US$ 300 billion (in real terms adjusted for inflation and interest) accumulated since 1942.

V. WRITINGS & METHODOLOGICAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO SCHOLARSHIP:

Dr. James Wilkie's leading research, writings, and methodological contributions to scholarship are extensive with more than ten books, over twenty-five edited volumes, and over 60 published articles:

- A. His book on The Mexican Revolution (1910–1963): Federal Expenditure and Social Change (1963 and 1967) developed the first index of social poverty; and it was the first work to show for any country how historical statistics can be used to reveal the extent to which actual expenditures (reality) differ from projected outlay (perception). This 1967 Bolton Prize work brought about Mexican government budgetary change and provided the methodology for the examination of budgets according to two dozen functions for other countries. The second edition in English was published in 1970; and the Brookings Institution, e.g., has followed his method to study U.S. budgeting.

In the Spanish-language edition (1978), Dr. Wilkie carried his projected and actual expenditure comparative yearly series for Mexico up through 1976 (<http://www.profmex.org/mexicoandtheworld/volume8/1winter03/03index1.htm>); and for the World Bank (1989) he took the series to 1988.

- B. His book on Elitelore (1973) opened this new field of research based on the concept that all persons have folklore but that leaders set themselves apart and self-justify their actions through the development of Elitelore. (http://www.elitelore.org/Capitulos/Elitelore_book1.pdf)

This book was published in Spanish in 1974. (<http://www.elitelore.org/Capitulos/eliteloresp.pdf>)

The concept of Elitelore refers generally to the accumulated knowledge, mythology, and tradition of leaders, from national figures to neighborhood caciques. Elitelore concerns leaders' self-perceptions of the past, the present, and the future. These perceptions are integrated into a life-history framework that is crucial to understanding how leaders participate in society. As elites construct a method of viewing the world, they begin to accept as truth many of their own assumptions and ideas; but seldom, even in writing autobiography, do they make explicit this life-history lore.

Elitelore has served as one of the two intellectual bases—(Elitelore and Folklore) for establishment of the Journal of Latin American Lore by Johannes Wilbert (who has edited and published the Journal at the UCLA Latin American Institute since 1975).

Dr. Wilkie colleagues, former students, and professors at many universities have adopted this concept about how to examine the lore of the elite, resulting, for example, in publication of their original articles or republication of the writings found in the Journal of Latin American Lore. Expansion of the concept is found in the more than 15 articles by other scholars in Professor Wilkie's Varieties of Elitelore (1996 and 2011), published online (<http://www.elitelore.org/book3.html>)

Dr. Wilkie's own oral history interviews with 17 Mexican Leaders (see Immediately below in part C.

C. Wilkie's four-volume Frente a la Revolución Mexicana: 17 Entrevistas de Historia Oral http://www.elitelore.org/Oral_History_Book_Series.html is the work that shows:

- (i) Conceptually how leaders construct a lore that permits self-justification of their 'historical role,' and
- (ii) Methodologically how researchers must engage in debate with leaders in order to test the meanings of 'reality.' Wilkie established the standards for oral history research that (i) encourage, rather than prohibit, the challenging of leaders' views by oral historians; and (ii) require that the unedited interview tapes be saved, rather than erased. The Columbia University Oral History Program, e.g., now follows Wilkie's lead in recognizing that contradiction between the taped and transcript versions itself offers a basis for analysis of Mexico's development.

<http://www.profmex.org/mexicoandtheworld/volume10/1winter05/losdearriba.html>

The titles of the volumes and persons interviewed are:

Vol 1: Intelectuales: Luis Chávez Orozco, Daniel Cosío Villegas, José Muñoz Cota, Jesús Silva Herzog (1995).

Vol 2. Ideólogos: Manuel Gómez Morín, Luis L. León, Germán List Arzubide, Juan de Dios Bojórquez, Miguel Palomar y Vizcarra (2001).

Vol 3. Líderes: Salvador Abascal, Ramón Beteta, Marte R. Gómez, Jacinto B. Treviño (2001)

Vol 4. Presidente y Candidatos: Vicente Lombardo Toledano, Juan Andreu Almazán, Ezequiel Padilla, Emilio Portes Gil (2004)

James Wilkie's Central and South American published oral history interviews include:

- Rafael Caldera, President of Venezuela, 1968–74, 1994--
- José Figueres, President of Costa Rica 1948–1949, 1953–1958, 1970–1974
- Father Benjamín Núñez, First Costa Rican Minister of Labor (1948–1949), Founding President of the National University of Costa Rica
- Víctor Paz Estenssoro, President of Bolivia 1952–56, 1960–64, 1985–89.

- D. Published in 1969, Wilkie's book on The Bolivian Revolution and U.S. Aid Since 1952 was the first to show the budgetary interaction between the U.S. Agency for International Development and a recipient country.
- E. Published in 1974, Wilkie's book on Measuring Land Reform in Bolivia and Venezuela provides the model for distinguishing between land title redistribution and agrarian reform (the latter including, e.g., credit and agricultural extension). Unfortunately, land redistribution in both countries is now underway anew and the same mistakes are being made once again--the "presidents for life" in both countries barely know only simple outlines of the history of their country and especially do not understand how and why the original experience of land reform failed, even as the current experience is failing.
